The M.A. Program in American Studies Scholarship Announcement

The M.A. Program in American Studies at the Center for Study of Ethnicity and Race at Columbia University is offering a 50% Tuition Reduction Scholarship for active teachers in New York City schools, public or private.

Students in the program design their own interdisciplinary curriculum from a wide range of courses across the humanities and social sciences in consultation with advisors. They also undertake a thesis project as the capstone of their studies.

The program has been a resource for the professional development of New York City teachers for more than 2 decades, but its recent move into the Center for the Study of Ethnicity and Race gives its students an opportunity to join a dynamic group of undergraduates, graduate students, and faculty.

The course of study can be completed part-time, with a number of courses running over the summer and in the evening during the school year. We have both fall and spring admissions cycles, for which see the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences admissions page: http://gsas.columbia.edu/admissions

If you are considering applying, please contact the program director, Dr. Matt Sandler, email mfs2001@columbia.edu, to discuss your plans.

Please see also the program’s website at:
http://www.columbia.edu/cu/cser/americanstudies-ma.html