DESCRIPTION:

Manuscripts, notebooks, typescripts and correspondence of Henry L. Moore (1869-1958), Professor of Political Economy at Columbia University, 1902-1929, dealing largely with general economic theory, econometrics and sociology. Included in the collection are the manuscripts of his published works, among them Economic Cycles (New York, 1914), Generating Economic Cycles (New York, 1923) and Synthetic Economics (New York, 1929), as well as those of unpublished studies, "The Good Life in a Progressive Democracy" and "Morals of Mediocrity." The notebooks include essays and miscellaneous notes on Vilfredo Pareto, Ernest Renan, Marcus Aurelius and other sociologists and philosophers. The correspondence includes letters from prominent economists, such as John Bates Clark, Antoine Augustin Cournot, F. V. Edgeworth, Edwin R. A. Seligman, Alfred Marshall, Frank Taussig and Léon Walras. Accompanying the collection is Prof. Moore's library of books, pamphlets and journals, many of them annotated, bearing upon all phases of economics. There are two boxes of printed materials: Textbooks from the Library of H. L. Moore, used by him when he was a student.
