Supplementing telephone conversation, A. J. Horvatt, formerly of Pennsylvania, is one of the most influential men among the Slovak people. He is very highly thought of, especially among the Slovak societies. Horvatt is now confined in the Auburn State Prison, at Auburn, N. Y., serving a term for some violation of the State Banking laws. His friends among the Slovaks in this part of the region have started a movement to have him transferred from Auburn to the Wallkill Prison, which is close to Pt. Jervis, N. Y. It seems that the Commissioner in charge of prisons in New York makes transfers of prisoners from time to time. It would be wholly within his prerogatives to make this transfer. Horvatt would like to be close to the Pennsylvania line so that his many friends in Pennsylvania might have better opportunity of visiting him, and he could keep in closer touch with the situation here.
