outlawing of atomic and hydrogen weapons.

On the other hand, we remember the Reds promised, at Genoa, to release prisoners of war.

Russia has changed in no meaningful manner, and the war has not ended; the present system has triumphed, and the conquerors are no longer the victors. The world opinion is peacemaking. The people of America are waiting for their own, and asking for, a declaration of their position toward Moscow and its allies.

It is all so poignant. The free world still has to contend with a multitude of ideas and vicious aggressions, but how to look at it all if we value our liberties?

HERBERT H. LEHMAN

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, on the first day of the year there retired from this body a Member who, in my opinion, was one of our great Americans.

On January 1 the New York Times published an editorial entitled "Mr. Lehman Retires."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the body of the Record at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. LEHMAN RETIRES

As Herbert H. Lehman was approaching the end of his third term as Governor of the State of New York, a political observer wrote from Albany that some got the impression that in his last term in public life and that it is saying to the public: "This has been my work and I think I have done it well."

That was in 1938, when Governor Lehman had already established a permanent place for himself in the history of this State as a distinguished chief executive as well as a noted philanthropist and businessman. In the 18 years since then the people of the State of New York and all of the United States can be thankful that Herbert H. Lehman did not retire from public life when he was a mere 50 years old. Now at last, at the age of 76, he retires, as he has done, from the public office—never retiring from public affairs.

We are sure that he will have many more years in which the State and the Nation can benefit from his advice and experience, and above all from his unswerving integrity of purpose. He is one of the voices in the Senate that could always be counted upon to speak up for justice, for decency and for dignity in the conduct of national and international affairs, in the relations of our Government to the defenseless as well as to the most powerful. There are few men in public life today of whom it could be said more feelingly on the eve of their retirement: "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, it had been my intention to ask to have included in this body of the Record this beautiful and merited editorial tribute to former Senator Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, which appeared on the editorial page of the New York Times on January 1, 1957. Inasmuch, however, as the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Chavez) has requested the printing in the body of this paragraph, which honors the distinguished, and illustrious public service of Herbert Lehman over a period of more than three decades, I shall not duplicate the request.
