P. 120 - Beginning of 3rd Paragraph:

Should be rewritten to make it more understandable.

"Senator McCarran introduced and ruthlessly pressed an Anti-Subversive Bill which was a revised version of the Mundt-Nixon Bill, which had passed the House the previous year. The McCarran Bill sought a variety of answers to the crisis.......

P. 120b - 2d Paragraph, first(7) seven lines:

Should be rewritten to make it accurate.

"Senator Kilgore, the ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, with President Truman's support, introduced a substitute bill which sought to strengthen the nation's internal security without dangerous abridgement of its liberties. It was hoped to use this substitute bill to defeat or drastically amend McCarran's bill. The bill, when it reached the floor, had relatively little support and was decisively defeated. Then Senator Lucas, without consulting his associates and to Lehman's consternation, instead of pressing for an adequate substitute bill, accepted the McCarran Bill by adding as an amendment the text of Kilgore's bill which had already been defeated. Perhaps he heard....."
The words "while he was in Florida" should be changed to read: "While he was in California".

Should be changed as follows, starting with the words "When Lehman returned...." "

"When Lehman returned and addressed the General Committee he emphasized the value of responsibility and the importance of broadening the base of the Reform Movement. He urged a greater realism in such matters as the consideration of Crotty. The recent vote, he intimated, could be viewed as a rebuke to the President, and any such gesture would retard attainment of the main objectives of the Reform Movement."

I would delete the words: "...partly because he expected a great deal of deference - he had grown used to it."