

“With the young, on the other hand, the motive of friendship appears to be pleasure, since the young guide their lives by emotion, and for the most part pursue what is pleasant to themselves, and the object of the moment. And the things that please them change as their age alters; hence they both form friendships and drop them quickly, since their affections alter with what gives them pleasure... What I’m trying to say, Plato, is: quit being such a cockblock.”

--Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics, Book VIII
