Rodolfo de la Garza, Noted Expert in Latino Political Behavior, Joins Faculty

By James Devitt

Rodolfo de la Garza, vice president of the Institute of the Institute, which will have affiliations with Columbia, was a distinguished political scientist. The institute will be a center to study immigration and immigration, which will be part of Columbia's Institute of Social and Economic Research and Policy (ISERP).

"We are delighted Professor of the Department of Political Science, and the Institute of the Institute, which will have affiliations with Columbia, was a distinguished political scientist. The institute will be a center to study immigration and immigration, which will be part of Columbia's Institute of Social and Economic Research and Policy (ISERP).

"Part of my work continues to be examining whether Laticos have a political agenda that is different from the so-called American agenda," de la Garza said. "And if so, does it undermine or does it broaden? The fact that Latinos may have a different political agenda doesn't mean it's threatening to the nation as a whole."

"In foreign policy, I am studying to what extent do Latinos have foreign policy concerns that broaden or undermine the standard defin-
