Over 150 Columbia professors, alumni, students and friends gathered Sat., Nov. 10 at Jackie Robinson Park on 146th St. and Bradhurst Ave in central Harlem to help plant daffodil bulbs as part of a city wide “Living Memorial.” The City of New York’s Park and Recreation worked along side institutions like Columbia to plant over 1 million daffodils in parks, along highways, in community gardens and in front of fire houses, police stations, libraries and schools throughout the five boroughs. The bulbs were donated by the government of Holland, and will bloom into “fields of gold” next spring and for all the springs to follow as a living memorial to the victims of the Sept. 11 attacks.
