The current White House administration is failing US economics, Jeffrey Sachs, director of Columbia’s Earth Institute, charged. Sachs, who at the time were young economists, frequently expressed dissenting views—from Abraham Lincoln to Martin Luther King Jr. “Dissent is a central part of our democratic tradition,” he said.

Sachs explained that Bush is trading the public’s future social security cuts for a tax refund. “This war is being financed, in the view of the ideologues, by cuts in future social spending,” he said. “(The White House Administration) dare not tell that now, but once in a while there’s an honest word from this group explaining that we’re really into a whole strategy of national restructuring as well as international restructuring.” Sachs explained that Bush is trading the public’s future social security savings for a tax refund.

Article 101: Jeffrey Sachs Gives White House Administration a Failing Grade

Jeffrey Sachs, at right, discusses the economic impact of the war in Iraq as panelists Rosalind Morris, professor of anthropology and director of the Institute for Women and Gender, center, and Richard Parker professor of sociomedical science, left, look on.

By COLIN MURPHY

The current White House administration is failing US economics, Jeffrey Sachs, director of Columbia’s Earth Institute, charged. Sachs, who at the time were young economists, frequently expressed dissenting views—from Abraham Lincoln to Martin Luther King Jr. “Dissent is a central part of our democratic tradition,” he said.

Sachs explained that Bush is trading the public’s future social security cuts for a tax refund. “This war is being financed, in the view of the ideologues, by cuts in future social spending,” he said. “(The White House Administration) dare not tell that now, but once in a while there’s an honest word from this group explaining that we’re really into a whole strategy of national restructuring as well as international restructuring.” Sachs explained that Bush is trading the public’s future social security savings for a tax refund.

By ELIZABETH GOLDEN

WKCR Back on the Airwaves in Tri-State Area

Columbia’s student-run radio station, WKCR 89.9FM, can once again be heard throughout the tri-state area.

Since the destruction of WKCR’s antenna on the World Trade Center two years ago, the radio station had been broadcasting to a limited area of upper Manhattan surrounding the Columbia campus. While broadcasting atop Carmen Hall, WKCR’s potential audience was reduced from 12 million to 2 million. The new transmitter, located at 4 Times Square, will once again make it possible to reach more than 11 million homes in the Tri-State area.

Members of the WKCR team are excited and grateful for their return to the airwaves. “After such a drawn out process to get our new antenna, it is just a huge relief to get our programming back out to the greater New York area. Hundreds of people are calling and e-mailing to congratulate us on our return,” said Matt Niederhauser, WKCR’s publicity manager.

WKCR has remained active in its commitment to alternative programming. It has long attracted listeners to a distinctive and eclectic mix of jazz, classical, new American, Latin and world music. In addition, WKCR offers a variety of arts, sports, news and public affairs programming that provides uncompromising viewpoints on an increasingly commercialized radio marketplace.

As the community of WKCR, our programming reflects the creative and cultural heritage of New York City and the artistic and educational visions of the Columbia University community.

WKCR Back on the Airwaves in Tri-State Area

By ELIZABETH GOLDEN

WKCR Back on the Airwaves in Tri-State Area

Columbia’s student-run radio station, WKCR 89.9FM, can once again be heard throughout the tri-state area.

Since the destruction of WKCR’s antenna on the World Trade Center two years ago, the radio station had been broadcasting to a limited area of upper Manhattan surrounding the Columbia campus. While broadcasting atop Carmen Hall, WKCR’s potential audience was reduced from 12 million to 2 million. The new transmitter, located at 4 Times Square, will once again make it possible to reach more than 11 million homes in the Tri-State area.

Members of the WKCR team are excited and grateful for their return to the airwaves. “After such a drawn out process to get our new antenna, it is just a huge relief to get our programming back out to the greater New York area. Hundreds of people are calling and e-mailing to congratulate us on our return,” said Matt Niederhauser, WKCR’s publicity manager.

WKCR has remained active in its commitment to alternative programming. It has long attracted listeners to a distinctive and eclectic mix of jazz, classical, new American, Latin and world music. In addition, WKCR offers a variety of arts, sports, news and public affairs programming that provides uncompromising viewpoints on an increasingly commercialized radio marketplace.

As the community of WKCR, our programming reflects the creative and cultural heritage of New York City and the artistic and educational visions of the Columbia University community.