Men Tie for Title With Harvard While Women Finish Second in League

Columbia men’s fencing clinched a tie for the Ivy League title by defeating Penn, 18-0, on Feb. 12. It is the fifth straight season in which the men ended at least a tie for the ancient eight crown; the Lions will share it with Harvard, who defeated Princeton and Yale in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The women’s team lost to Penn, 13-12, to earn second place in the league.

Columbia is a large metropolis, both as a city and as a league. It is home to 300,000 people, and it is home to 12 Ivy League schools. The city is a major economic and cultural center, and it is a major academic center, with Columbia University being one of the top universities in the world. It is a large city, and it is a large league. It is a city of contrasts, and it is a league of contrasts.

Columbia’s women’s fencing team has been a dominant force in the Ivy League for many years. They have won the league title seven times in the past 10 years, and they have been runner-up four times. They have been a consistent force in the Ivy League, and they have been a consistent force in the national scene as well.

In 2005, the Columbia women’s fencing team won the national championship. They defeated the University of Pennsylvania, 17-10, in the title match. They had already defeated Harvard, 13-12, and Yale, 15-10, in previous rounds. They were the only Ivy League team to win a title.

The Columbia women’s fencing team is a reflection of the university’s commitment to excellence in all areas.
