My Spring Break

In high school, my spring breaks were never very interesting. Every day I would stay at home either sleeping or watching television. This year, however, I resolved that I would spend my spring break well.

I went home for a day at the beginning of spring break to see my mother and have dinner with family. After the dinner, I took a bus back to school because I had to work the next day. I work for Barnard College helping professors fix their computers as well as answer their computer-related questions. This job is very interesting because I not only am able to learn a lot about computers, but also I get to meet a lot of professors and staff members.

Besides working, in my spare time I went clothes shopping. As I shopped, I also got to enjoy New York City. The weather was so beautiful, which made me very happy as I strolled through the city. I also had a few friends who had remained at school for spring break, so we went out to eat together and had good conversation. Finally on the last day of break, I got all my schoolwork done.

Despite having a lot of schoolwork, my spring break went well. I slept well, ate well, and played well.
