

Students and Trainees as Researchers

Andre M. Ivanoff, PhD
Associate Professor
Columbia University
School of Social Work

Students and trainees who conduct research studies as principal investigators need to be cognizant of the risks and responsibilities in their role as the principal investigator. The importance of conducting research in an ethical, responsible manner is critical to development as a respected researcher. This presentation will offer essential information pertaining to how faculty can inspire students and trainees to practice research responsibility.