This course serves as an introduction to the politics of international economic relations. It examines the principal conceptual approaches in the field of international political economy and basic elements of its key substantive issue areas, namely, international monetary relations, trade, and north-south relations. In addition, we analyze several contemporary issues, such as the impact of globalization, strategic trade policy, structural adjustment, and emerging market financial crises.

The assignments for this course are a take-home midterm exam and a ten-page policy paper or take-home final exam. Each assignment counts for 40% of your grade. Class participation accounts for the remaining 20%.

The following books should be considered for purchase:

Eichengreen, Barry. Globalizing Capital. Princeton University Press, 1996.

Fishlow, Albert and Karen Parker, eds. Growing Apart: Causes and Consequences of Global Wage Inequality. Council on Foreign Relations, 1999.

Rodrik, Dani. Has Globalization Gone Too Far? Institute for International Economics, 1997.

Additional readings listed in the syllabus are available in the course reader.
