Notes on the reading list: This section uses a slightly different reading list from the standard Literary Humanities reading list, which means you will need to have four different books from those in the standard set. The four books can all be found at BookCulture on 112th Street; ask for the books for my section of Lit. Hum. Or order them on line, using the ISBN numbers on the other side of the page. These are the differences:

Iliad: We read the moving and exciting translation by Robert Fitzgerald, published by Farrar, Straus; not the boring translation by Richmond Lattimore.

Odyssey: We read the moving and exciting translation by Robert Fitzgerald, published by Farrar, Straus; not the boring translation by Richmond Lattimore.

Euripides: We read his Bacchae (in the volume Euripides V, published by the University of Chicago Press), not his Medea.

Aristophanes: We read his The Frogs (in Frogs and Other Plays, published by Penguin), not his Lysistrata.

The Bible: In addition to the standard readings, we also read Romans, Galatians, and some other excerpts.

Requirements: Two intelligent and well-written essays and a one-hour final exam (anyone who needs extra time may have two hours to complete the exam); attendance at every class. The papers should each be between 1,000 and 1,500 words long; any paper longer than 1,500 words will get a grade of F. Each paper must begin (below the title) with a very brief quotation from one of the works on the syllabus printed as an epigraph. Then the opening sentence or sentences of the essay itself must directly interpret the words of the quotation. Do not begin with empty generalizations or with any other kind of fluff and blather that your high-school teachers encouraged you to use when starting a paper. The rest of the paper must gradually work outward from your opening sentences to an interpretation of a larger part of the book or the book as a whole. In other words, your paper must demonstrate that you can connect the details of a book to its overall meaning and design.

Absolutely no smartphones, cell phones, tablets, laptops, netbooks, ultrabooks, messaging devices, iPods, MP3 players, CD players, DVD players, video players, game consoles, settop boxes, internet-connected eyewear, radios, televisions, still cameras, video cameras, sound recorders, headphones, virtual-reality headsets, or global positioning devices; absolutely no electronic devices of any kind unless required for medical reasons. Anyone who writes, sends, reads, or even receives a text message or e-mail during class—or while you wait in the classroom for class to begin—will be banished. No baseball caps; no head coverings of any kind unless required by your religion or for medical reasons. No passive-aggressive questions (for example, the kind that begin “My problem with this book is” or “Speaking as a”). Bathroom visits during class are strongly discouraged.
