Senator Approves Physical Therapy Doctorate, Postpone Decision on Nursing Practice

BY THOMAS MATHEWSON

The University Senate voted on Jan. 31 to approve a clinical doctorate in physical therapy, once again postponing action on another doctoral program, in nursing practice. The legislature also learned of new editorial guidelines for the publication of the Senate column in the University Record, and unanimously approved a new master's degree in computer engineering.

The Education Committee had recommended action on the physical therapy doctorate (DTP) even though it had not yet seen a final version of new standards for clinical doctorates that it had requested of Health Sciences Vice President Gerald Fischbach last term. Committee chair Letty Moss-Salentijn (Ten., SDOS) explained to the Senate that the proposed program exceeds standards received by DTP by a national accrediting agency, and said immediate action was needed for Columbia to be able to offer the degree next year and remain competitive in the field.

An addition to the DTP resolution called for a review of the Senate program to approve the new standards for clinical doctorates. This argument convinced the Senate, which voted for the DTP with only one opposed and four abstentions, including the three Nursing senators. Suzanne Bolden (Ten., Nursing) said she had no objection to the DTP, but called attention to the different treatment accorded the proposed Doctor of Nursing Practice (DNP), which must await approval of the new standards.

Though the DNP cleaned the Education Committee last October, a month before the DPT, it has had rougher sailing in the Senate, with extensive debate over the course of two plenary meetings in November, and two more postponements. In a memo to fellow senators before the Jan. 31 meeting, Executive Committee chair Paul Duby (Ten., SEAS) said “reservations have been expressed and questions have been raised” about the concept of this new degree than about the design of this particular program. They “suggest that the current DNP is not yet ready for Senate action.”

In his regular report Duby also announced the adoption of new editorial guidelines for the Senate column in the University Record, prepared by Sens. Jonathan Cole (the provost), Kristen DiMello (Ten., Art & Sci.), and Eduardo Mouzinho (Ten., Soc. & Gov.). The new procedures had been in effect for the last Senate column, published on January 24, and added that there would have been no problems with the three previous columns if the guidelines had been in place last fall.

They provide a procedure to resolve disagreements about the content of the column, leaving final say with the editor of the Record, but specifying three grounds for changes (apart from style): 1. Misrepresentations and lengths; 2. Insult, libel, and breaches of confidentiality. In such cases, the editor will explain the changes in writing.

The Senate meets next on March 7 in the Davis Auditorium in Schapiro Engineering, Anyone with a CUID is welcome. More information is available on the web, or at 854-4008 at 35th floor.
