More than 50 leading scientists and policymakers will discuss and prioritize the best scientific practices and most urgent needs for investment in the areas of energy, food, water, and health, especially in developing countries. State of the Planet is a biennial event hosted by the Earth Institute at Columbia that focuses on issues of concern not just for developing nations but for the entire planet.

“Scientists will shape a better understanding of food, water, energy, and health through global science and identify opportunities for global actions,” said Jeffrey D. Sachs, director of the Earth Institute.
