traced, the evidence on the east of the valley in the form of lateral moraine terraces shows that a long tongue of ice lay over the gorge and for some miles east of the present river holding up the drainage of the side streams for a time, giving a more or less definite belt of deposits traceable northward as