History of Publishers Weekly

Publishers Weekly (also known as PW since 2005) was founded in 1872 as The Publishers' Weekly. It is the oldest journal dedicated to the book industry. Originally, the publication served as a catalog for publishers to provide information on new titles to booksellers in a cost-effective way. Over time, the publication expanded to include articles, features, and other items. Book reviews, which have become a major part of the publication, were not added until the 1940s.

Publishers Weekly was founded by R.R. Bowker, which owned and published Publishers Weekly until the company was purchased by Reed Publishing in 1985. Reed Publishing then placed Publishers Weekly under the management of Cahners Publishing Company. Reed Publishing subsequently merged with Elsevier to become Reed Elsevier in 1993. Currently, Publishers Weekly is part of Reed Business Information, the business information division of Reed Elsevier. However, Reed Elsevier put Reed Business Information up for sale in February 2008, citing a desire to move away from businesses that are largely dependent on advertising sales. The future of Publishers Weekly remains unclear as it continues to define itself in the fast-changing publishing world.

Description

This collection contains of Publishers Weekly's reference files on publishing houses. Most of the records consist of clippings from Publishers Weekly, but the files also include clippings from other sources, as well as advertisements, annual reports, brochures, catalogs, commemoratives, correspondence, histories, legal records, obituaries, programs, prospectuses, and survey responses.

Arrangement

This collection is arranged alphabetically by corporate name.

The majority of the records consist of clippings of articles and other items printed in Publishers Weekly as well as other sources. The files also include advertisements, annual reports, brochures, catalogs, commemoratives, correspondence, histories, legal records, obituaries, programs, prospectuses, and survey responses.

The collection is arranged alphabetically, but there are some areas of inconsistency in the filing of publishing houses that have gone through name changes, mergers, or buyouts. These records may be found under the company's most recent name, but may also be filed separately under the names of all of the individual publishing houses. The files often contain cross-references for affiliated publishing houses.
